Jennie Stellwagon Lifelong Mokena Resident Dies

Mrs. Jennie M. Stellwagon, aged 78 years, a lifelong resident of Mokena died in her home of a sudden heart attack shortly after 12 o'clock Sunday night.

Her brother Alfred Hatch, who had been making his home with her since the death of her husband five years ago, awoke shortly before mid night when he discovered his sister in distress.

He tried to phone Dr. E. G. McMahon but the latter was at a Joliet hospital at the time. Mr. Hatch then called Mrs. Hugo Neithammer. Mrs. Stellwagon passed away about 12:20.

She had observed her 78th birthday Sunday by entertaining a group of relatives and had appeared in her usual health. She did not complain of any illness and her sudden demise came as a great shock to her family.

Mrs. Stellwagon, nee Hatch, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Hatch, pioneer residents of Mokena where she was born April 28, 1867, and resided all of her life. On October 24 1894 she was united in marriage with Henry Stellwagon who preceded her in death March 7, 1940. Surviving are one brother Alfred of Mokena, four sisters Mrs. Sam Fulton, Mrs. Herman Grassle, Mrs. Thos. W. Harvey all of Joliet and Mrs. Geo. Pittaway of Chicago, several nieces and nephews.

Mrs. Stellwagon was a member of the Mokena camp of RNA, of the Auxiliary of VFW, and the Mokena Red Cross branch. She was an untiring worker in the Red Cross rooms in Mokena and established a record of 1200 work hours since the opening of the local Red Cross work room.

Funeral services were conducted Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Sonntag Funeral home in Joliet with the Rev. R. P. Blatt of Joliet officiating. Burial was made in the family lot in the Marshall cemetery west of Mokena.

The total amount collected by the twelve Scouts was 14,440 pounds. A check of $108 has been sent to the troop by Janecke Bros. of Joliet who sent a truck to haul the paper. One half of this amount will go into the troop treasury and the other half will be distributed among the boys for their individual camping fund.

NEW LENOX VOTERS:

We all believe that New Lenox should be incorporated the question is when? We believe we are ready now. When priorities are lifted after the war we can expect a boom in real estate sales and enlarged building program. This of course, will present problems to our community that we cannot solve as individuals; but united we can keep New Lenox the fine village that it is now. Let us all get out and vote for incorporation.

GATHER 4 TONS PAPER

Young people of the Frankfort Victory club who worked during their Easter vacation collecting waste paper announced at their meeting Thursday afternoon that they gathered more than four tons. Some of this amount had been collected earlier and together brought the club about $68.00. On the first day of the drive Mrs. H. P. Folkers, whose sons Frank and George are president and treasurer respectively, drove the Folkers pickup truck herself to help the boys. The main part of the hauling was done by Clarence Waldvogel. Thursday's meeting was held at the St. Peter's church supper, Roger and Alan Hedges being hosts. At the brief business meeting the group decided to purchase a new American and Service Flag for the village pole.

Red Hot Incorporation Election at New Lenox Saturday; Opposition Develops

Saturday of this week New Lenox will hold one of the hottest elections ever held in the history of the village. The big question to be decided at this election is whether or not the village should be incorporated.

A definite organized resistance movement has developed and a broad side has been issue setting forth the reasons of the opposition why the incorporation plan should be defeated. The high cost of operating a local municipality is being chiefly stressed as well as the increase of taxes thru special assessments for local improvements contemplated if the village should be incorporated.

Read the half page adv. in this issue by the Property Owners Committee in which a set of questions and answers sets forth the various objections to incorporation appear. The objectors feel this is a very inopportune time to try and put over any new proposition involving any new taxes.

A mass meeting was held Thursday night at which various speakers outlined the benefits to be derived from incorporation and an opportunity was also given to hear any objections.

From present indications every voter in the area of the proposed incorporation will be out to vote. Autos will be used by both sides to bring in every voter. The polling place will be Otto Bogmet's Cities Service Station at the intersection of Lincoln highway and Cedar Road. The polls will be open from 6 am to 5 pm.

New Mokena Board Takes Office

The new Mokena village board was sworn into office Tuesday evening. The outgoing board transacted routine business. The outgoing board set the salaries for the incoming and hold over village officials as follows: President of the board $80 per year; Village trustees $3 per meeting; Village clerk $125 per year. The Village treasurer is paid on a commission basis for the amount of money handled by him during the year.

Philip J. Hacker who was elected to the board and was only in office a few months before he was called in the army, sent in his resignation, but inasmuch as it arrived too late to allow the matter of filling the vacancy to be placed on the ballot, the old board ordered the resignation tabled, giving as its reason for doing so that Mr. Hacker might be able to return home at the close of the European war and be able then to take up the duties of his office again.

When the old board gave up their seats for the new members, it was learned that Albert Braun one of the outgoing trustees has served the village in this capacity for the past 33 years, the longest record ever set by any local office holder.

Circuit Judge James V. Bartley has taken under advisement the motion to dismiss the appeal from a claim allowed by the probate court in the estate of the late Mrs. Emma Rees Clarke. Objecting to the claim is Merle Tenpenning Moore of California, a niece of the late Mrs. Clarke. The motion to dismiss has been filed because the appeal costs were not paid within the 60 days allowed for the appeal. The law firm of Krusemark and Krusemark which represents Mrs. Moore said the bond had been sent to California to sign and that the costs were not computed by the clerk prior to the time. The claim to which Mrs. Moore is objecting was allowed to Howard W. Scheiblich and his wife Lucille of Mokena with whom Mrs. Clark lived. They alleged that it was money they had advanced to her during her lifetime.

MOKENA SOLDIER HAS CLOSE CALL IN GERMANY

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Clark of Mokena, received word this week that their son, Pvt. Frederick Clark who has been in the European theatre of war for more than twenty months, has received three fractured fingers on his left hand.

Pvt. Clark is serving with the 28th Division of the 3rd Army and took part in the Normandy invasion; the battles of St. Lo and Bastogne and other action, firing a 155 mm. Howitzer cannon. Following Bastogne, he was sent to a rest camp for a short period, and when in action again, he was assigned the task of hauling the 155 mm. Howitzer cannons to the battle fronts and following that was assigned to hauling ammunition to the Field Artillery.

On the day he received injury to his fingers he was hauling a load of 7 tons of ammunition on his truck and a trailer attached to his truck. They were in Germany, going down a hill, when he lost control of the truck, and ran into the same kind of a truck directly ahead of him, also containing a heavy load of ammunition. It is marvelous to think the only injury he received was the fractured fingers, which of course is not pleasant, but considering the contents of the load, a large explosion could have taken place. We would say this was a 'close call.'

Pvt. Clark is now in a hospital with his arm in a cast, which will remain so for the next six weeks.

AN INSIDE STORY

Harry Truman will be known as the man who didn't want to be President.

Unassuming, modest, in love with his job as senator from Missouri, Harry never wanted to be vice president in the first place. And after he was elected, he dreaded the thought that anything might happen to President Roosevelt. Once, during the campaign, he awoke in a cold sweat. He had dreamed that Roosevelt had died and he was called upon to assume his mantle. Harry said he never had such a terrible dream before in all his life.

Truman had arrived in Speaker Sam Rayburn's office to discuss that awesome possibility when the call came to hurry to the White House.

On Wednesday, the night before, Speaker Rayburn had had a premonition of things to come. Dining with friends, Rayburn said:

"This country is in for a great tragedy, and I feel it's coming very soon. I don't think the President will be with us much longer."

Rayburn's listeners were shocked. When they asked the speaker for an explanation, he replied:

"Roosevelt's not a well man."

Refusing to be more specific, he turned his head away from the table for a moment and then said: "I think I'll have a talk with Harry (Truman) tomorrow. He's got to be prepared to carry a tremendous burden. He's got to get himself ready for this."

Next afternoon, about three, even as Franklin Roosevelt was entering his last hour of life, Rayburn called over to Truman's office in the senate, said he wanted to see the vice president. Truman said he'd drop over when the senate recessed. He had just arrived to see Rayburn when word came from Steve Early that the event which Truman so long dreaded, finally had transpired.

TRUMAN'S OLD STAMPING GROUND

It has been a long time since a President of the United States went up to Capitol hill to confer with congressmen. However, it didn't seem at all unusual when Pres. Harry Truman came up to the senate for lunch on the first day he served as President of the United States. Also he didn't act any differently.

"I feel just as if someone had hit me over the head with a 16-pound mallet," he said. "I don't know what's happened to me yet. 'This morning,' he continued, 'I wanted to come up on the hill to see my old friends, and they tried to tell me it wasn't done. 'Done or not,' I replied, 'I'm going to do it.'"

"But when I went out to get my car, I found it surrounded by motorcycles. They took me up to the hill and caused a terrible commotion on the street. They even stopped people from crossing the street."

At this point, Majority Leader Alben Barkley said:

"That's just what happens to a country boy when he gets in your spot."

Truman laughed and concluded: "Some day I hope they'll build a tunnel between congress and the White House so the President can come up here without blocking traffic."

Truman also told his old congressional colleagues that he hoped they would come down to see him. "I may not always agree with you," he said, "but I'll give your request all the consideration I think it is worth."

Michigan's Republican Senator Vandenberg piped up at this point to ask, "Couldn't you give it just a little more consideration than you think it's worth?"

They all agreed that the Presidency hadn't spoiled Harry and they didn't think it would.

COURAGEOUS SENATOR

Though Harry Truman dreaded the possibility of becoming President, as senator he never ran away from a fight.

His chief senatorial battles were as chairman of the so-called Truman committee. The name resulted from Harry's crusading determination to investigate war scandals or anything else interfering with the war. Harry was so fervent that even Republicans on the committee came to admire and respect him.

Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan, one of the most fearless men in congress, joined the committee under the impression that Truman was playing politics. He soon learned to the contrary. If the administration was to blame, Truman said so. Ferguson came to be a rooter on the Truman team.

Time after time also, Truman stood up against the army and navy. Some senators put their tails between their legs where the brass-hats are concerned. But not Truman.

He also told the truth about Jesse Jones' delays in providing synthetic rubber, exposed the secret deal with the Aluminum corporation for the Ship-Shaw plant in Canada, prodded the navy for failing to accept the Higgins landing craft, thus delaying the fateful European invasion.

President's New Appointments

Among the first appointments made by President Harry S. Truman were (1) J. Leonard Reinsch, as press and radio secretary to the President; (2) Matthew J. Connelly, executive secretary; (3) Col. Harry H. Vaughan, military aide; (4) John W. Snyder, St. Louis banker, as Federal Loan administrator; (5) Alfred Schindler, assistant to secretary of commerce.

When War Arrived at Okinawa

Equipped for any emergency, marines who landed at Okinawa hurdle a stone wall as they push across the island. First phase of the operation brought little opposition, the invading forces were quick to grasp the opportunity, and the early assault waves drove to the interior of the island shortly after they hit the beach. Strong opposition came later.

G.I. Joe's Reporter Killed

Ernie Pyle, famous war correspondent, acclaimed as the fighting men's personal reporter, recently killed by a Jap machine-gun bullet on a little island off Okinawa, is shown in his last photo. This is typical of the way he covered both wars, by living and working with the men. He escaped death several times while covering the war with Germany.

THE HEBREW MONARCHY
AT ITS HEIGHT

LESSON TEXT—I Kings 9:1-7, 26; 10:26-28; 11:4, 11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33:12.

Keeping up with the neighbors is not always a desirable thing, but both men and nations do it. When the last judge, Samuel, had become old, Israel began to demand a king like the nations round about them.

Although the rejection of His direct rule over them through His chosen men was a sad development, God permitted them to choose a king. Saul, their first king, was evidently selected for his appearance and his physical superiority. He began well, in dependence upon God, but came to a tragic end because of sin.

David, who followed Saul, had his failings, but was essentially a man after God's own heart. He wanted to build a temple for God, but because he was a man of war, God decreed that his son, Solomon, who succeeded him, was to build it.

With the reign of Solomon, and especially with the building of the temple, the monarchy in Israel reached its highest development—only, to go down to disaster.

Our lesson opens after the remarkably fine prayer with which Solomon dedicated the temple.

I. Dedication Accepted (9:1-3).

God was pleased with Solomon's intelligent and spiritual prayer and the act of dedication, and He hallowed the house of the Lord by putting His name on it and assuring them of His continual presence.

It is a delightful thing that God is willing to accept at the hands of a man the dedication of either himself or his possessions for God's glory. The Lord is Maker of heaven and earth and surely has no need of what we have. And yet He does have need of it, and is ready to use it as we present it to Him.

Our act of dedication results in His act of acceptance and consecration of our talents, our time, our money, or our goods for His glorious service.

But God expects His people to continue in devotion to Him if they are to have His continued presence and blessing.

II. Consecration Expected (9:4-7).

The throne of David was to remain in the lineage of Solomon as long as he and the people of Israel walked uprightly before God. He expects obedience to His commandments, and apart from it He cannot give His blessing.

Note the faithfulness of God. No man would ever have introduced such a note of solemn portent and of warning into an occasion which seemed all gladness and light. Prosperity was at its height. The king was in favor with both God and man. Into that picture of success and grandeur God paints with bold strokes a great and striking "IF."

It is presumption to think that we can coast along on past attainments or former piety. If we are to be used and blessed of God tomorrow and the day after, we must look to our consecration to Him and our obedience to His will.

III. Possessions Glorified (9:26; 10:26-28).

We read in 10:23 that "King Solomon exceeded all kings of the earth in riches and wisdom." He had reached the pinnacle. The Chinese have a proverb, "The man who stands on the pinnacle has nowhere to step but off."

It need not have been a snare for Solomon to be rich if he had maintained his simple faith in God, but the temptations brought in by heathen wives whom he foolishly married, coupled with the deceitfulness of riches (Matt. 13:22), soon led him into the downward path.

The almost unbelievable riches of Solomon could have been used for the glory of God, but instead they were an end in themselves.

When money takes the ruling hand in a man's life, he loses out spiritually. His life becomes an empty farce; his soul can be satisfied with only more and more gold.

Solomon was soon led into the folly of turning to the worship of heathen gods. Little wonder that we find:

IV. Judgment Decreed (11:4, 11).

It would seem that a man who knows the Lord should grow in grace and become even more intimate with God as he grows old. One might expect that the passing of years should mellow and sweeten life. But sad to say, it is often not the case.

"When Solomon was old," he went after false gods. How tragic! Little wonder that one of the saintliest men this writer ever knew prayed constantly as he went on into his eighties, "Lord, keep me from ever becoming a wicked old man." Other old men and women (yes, and all of us) could well pray the same prayer.

So it became necessary for God to wrest the kingdom out of the hands of the great Solomon, and Israel goes on to its history of a people divided, of disobedience to God, and of ultimate judgment. Of that we shall see more in the weeks just ahead.

Kidneys Must Work Well—

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

MARY O'HARA
W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Flicka's colt, long overdue, is born. Ken McLaughlin, her 12-year-old owner, brings her in from the range to the warm barn. The foal is white, and evidently a throwback to the Albino, a wild stallion that is Flicka's grandsire. Ken, who had hoped that his colt would develop into a racer, is troubled when he realizes that it has so many wild characteristics in its nature. Next morning there are guests for breakfast. Colonel Harris has brought his mare to be bred with the Goose Bar stallion, Banner. Charles Sargent, a millionaire horse breeder, asks the colonel why he didn't choose his Appalachian as sire. The colonel replies that he wants his colt to become a tough cavalry horse.

CHAPTER IV

"But think what you charge as a stud fee," said the Colonel. "Two hundred and fifty bucks! That's too much for a poor soldier."

"What I charge is one thing and what I get is another," growled Charley, rolling and lighting a cigarette.

"Run out, Ken," ordered his father, "and tell the sergeant to drive up to the stables and put the mare in the little east corral. She can wait there until I get Banner in."

"Gee!" exclaimed Howard. "Getting Banner in!"

Ken went out and saw a car and trailer, two uniformed men in the front seat and a blanketed mare in the trailer. He gave the message and returned to the dining room.

"Besides," Colonel Harris was saying, "your Appalachian is as pampered and petted and sheltered as a movie star, with his special pasture and meadows and feed and stables for every sort of weather and season—he don't have to think any more—everybody thinks for him."

"Pampered!" roared Charley indignantly. "Pampered so that he produces one winner after the other! Country Squire, who won at Tia Juana in 1934! Spinnaker Boom, who won the handicap last year at Santa Anita, and a filly—Coquette—in the two-year-old class—"

"I know, I know all that," said Colonel Harris. "He's a good stud for racing stock. But this tough fellow of Rob's horse—Banner—that's the sort of fellow for my money, thinks for himself, takes care of his mares on the range in all sorts of weather, knows what Rob is thinking and doing a mile away—lives like a robber baron up there in the hills with his harem—"

"Talk about robber barons," said Rob, "remember that stallion they called the Albino? There was a robber baron for you—reigned like a king, no one to think for him! Robbed, pillaged, helped himself to whatever he wanted—"

"What became of him anyway?" asked Colonel Harris. "Haven't heard anything about him for years."

"I'll wager he's around somewhere, lusty and wicked as ever, with a band of mares picked from all over the state," said Rob. "And the finest! He sure knew how to pick 'em! You know, we had him in a corral once."

"Pity someone didn't have sense enough to keep him," said Charley. "If I'd been there—"

"If you'd been there," said Rob sarcastically, "it might have been you he ran down and damn near killed instead of me."

"Hurt you any?" asked Colonel Harris, and Rob leaned forward and parted the black hair on one temple. A short white scar showed. "I dodged him at the last minute, but he left me a keepsake—one of his front hoofs."

"Gee—ee—ee—" said Ken.

"And I'll never forget the look of his eyes," continued Rob. "I saw them close—too close—a wicked eye."

"What kind of an eye, dad?"

"An eye like Rocket's. Charley, remember that fast black mare I had that you almost bought?"

"You mean, that I bought and you almost delivered," corrected Charley.

Rob grinned and turned to Mort Harris to explain. "He bought this mare from me for five hundred dollars provided I could deliver her safe and sound. She was a hellion, one of the colts out of my mare Gypsy, sired by the Albino—and she had that same wild, wicked eye of his with the white ring around it—well, I got her in the truck but when we went under the sign out there by the highway, she reared up and brained herself against it."

"And you've heard about my Mohawk," roared Charley, "out of Stole-Away by Appalachian—won everything there was to win at Saginaw Falls two years ago! I tell you, Mort, Appalachian—"

Mort Harris put up his hand. "Charley, I don't want a racehorse. I'm not going to run away from the enemy. I want a horse like Rob's, trained in the hills and high altitudes. I want endurance and good wind and a heart for anything. I want to know when I start out on him that he'll bring me back. Stand up under any condition. Besides—Appalachian's black. And I want a sorrel."

"And you'll get it from Banner," said Rob. "He breeds true. Occasionally I get a black colt—his dam was a black Arab mare named El Kantara—but mostly sorrels, one after the other, as like as peas in a pod."

Hearing this, Howard and Ken looked at each other, Ken blank and disconcerted, and Howard making fantastic faces of alarm and concern. He mouthed silently, "When are you going to tell?" And Ken mouthed savagely back, "Shut up!"

The boys saw their mother's eyes upon them and stopped their face-making.

Ken was very thoughtful. The morning was going to be crowded with excitement. Bringing Banner in. Breeding the Colonel's mare. He began to feel worried. Events always got themselves tangled around you so that things came out wrong. Perhaps it would be better to save his surprise until all this other stuff was over.

Rob added, "And you're right in wanting a sorrel, Mort. A sorrel's the hardest of all to break and train, but when you've done it, you've got a horse." He pushed his chair back.

"What about you fellows riding out with me to get Banner and the mares?" repeated Harris.

"Why bring in the mares? Banner's the one we want."

Rob looked at him, an odd quizzical gleam in his eye, and Charley Sargent drawled, "You don't really understand our western broncs, Mort. They're so damn affectionate."

Banner searched the wind.

Take Banner now—this tough boy you've been bragging about—why it would just about break his heart to be separated from his harem. Rob wouldn't have the heart to do it, would you, Rob?"

Harris grinned. "Well—sure. I spend my life on horseback anyway, and now that I'm off on a little visit for a bit of relaxation, I suppose the thing to do is ride some more. I hope you can give me a good mount."

Rob turned to Howard. "What horses are up in the corrals now, Howard?"

"Taggart and some geldings, Bronze—Shorty—Highboy—"

"Run up there, Howard, and tell Gus to saddle Taggart and Bronze and Shorty."

Half an hour later they were in the corrals ready to mount. Charley Sargent, as always, in his long Cheyenne pants and wide-brimmed hat, and the Colonel as neatly turned out in breeches and boots as Rob himself.

"You can have your choice," said Rob generously.

"Which do you ride?" asked Charley suspiciously.

"This blood-bay Taggart—you can have her—you never felt such gait."

Sargent removed his big hat and scratched his head reflectively. "She looks a dandy—and I'm sure obliged to you. But a mare—no, I think I'll take one of the geldings—you take the mare, Harris—"

"What a grand horse," said the Colonel looking her over with interest. "All right, I'll take that big mare." He mounted her and settled himself in the saddle.

Charley mounted Shorty and Rob Bronze, and the three men rode out of the corrals together.

Banner searched the wind.

The mares and colts were grazing in a saucer-like depression of the upland, the stallion a little above them cropping the sweet tubular grass along the edge of a ridge in the hillside. Suddenly he flung up his head and stood alert, his compact red-gold body gathered and twisted to face the alarm, his legs thrust out against the irregularities of the rocky ground, his red tail and mane flying in the wind.

For a few seconds he stood motionless, then moved into action. At a swift trot he circled the mares, his nose lifted, nostrils vibrating for the scent. It came now and again—just the faintest tang—

He swept in widening circles, reaching his nose higher, his eyes and ears wild and eager.

Up above him rose the pinnacle, topped with a craggy outcrop of rock. This was the highest point for miles around. From here his long-range eyes could see the farthest moving speck and his razor-keen sense of smell catch and identify all that was on the wind. He went up the steep sides without variation of pace or action, the long smooth muscles under his shining coat rippling effortlessly.

He stood on the peak, forefeet planted on the topmost spur of rock, his body sloping down. He lifted and swung his head, but he didn't get the scent. He went down again and began circling, nose pointed straight up, tail high and pluming over his haunches. Above him the deep blue sky bent low and the solid white cumulus clouds hurried across it as if they were squeezed between earth and sky.

The mares and colts grazed placidly.

The movement of a stallion's head when he is searching the wind is something to see—never still a moment. Swinging, lifting high, higher—even straight up to the sky, the nostrils wide and pulsing. He covers the ground at a swift, effortless trot or canter, always in a circle, so that he misses no inch of the field of scent.

At last Banner, on one of his wide circles, caught the unmistakable scent of his master, halted, swung around, and headed for the approaching horsemen, but wide of them and behind, so that, as Rob kept glancing backwards and to the sides, well knowing what to expect, he suddenly saw the stallion in pursuit of them, coming more sedately now, cautious, with his high springing trot and his steady eye fixed on them.

He was full of questions and looked to Rob for the answers. What was up? Was he to bring the mares in? Was the band to be moved to another pasture? Or was it to be just an exhibition?

The men drew rein and turned to meet him. Both Sargent and Harris had seen the horse on former occasions, but it was impossible not to feel excitement and to respond with altered expressions as the intelligent animal drew near, taking in the group with pricked ears and an investigating curiosity.

Rob had often wondered how the stallion read his thoughts. Possibly by the swing and tilt of his body as he rode. Close observation will disclose how continuously the body, by a hundred little movements, indicates thoughts and intentions. Or possibly, it was by the direction of his glances. To a certain extent, of course, by his words and the tone of his voice and definite signals.

"Look at him!" exclaimed Charley Sargent. "The son-of-a-gun!"

"Some horse," said Harris. "Come up behind us—"

Rob said, "His mares are probably back yonder." He gestured over his shoulder. "No oats for you today, old boy—"

Banner knew that already. There were never oats when his master came a-horseback—only when he came in the automobile. Rob added, "Where's your family?" and, turning slowly, caught sight of the band of mares a mile away. He touched spur to his horse.

"There they are! Want to see them, Mort?"

"I sure do."

They cantered over the range, the stallion following, running in half circles around them, crowding close, sniffing at each of the horses.

As they drew rein near the band of mares, Charley's gelding swung around to face Banner and they spoke—half-sneal, half-grunt. Both of them reared and suddenly Charley was having trouble in keeping his seat as the two began a playful fight, striking at each other with their forefeet, nipping over the head, trying for the neck.

"They're old friends," said Rob, grinning.

Charley leaned out and made a swing at the stallion. "Get away with you, you brute!"

Banner gave a great start and bounded away but in a few seconds was back again, this time sniffing at the mare Harris rode, sidling up to her, crowding close. Suddenly he lunged at her.

Colonel Harris drew her away and shouted at the stallion. Banner circled, came back with head low, snaking along the grass, and Rob and Charley grinned, pulled up their horses, and watched.

The mare was receiving commands from two quarters. From her rider, who held her forcibly back and commanded her to cease her play with the stallion and to stand still—from Banner, whose single lunge had been enough to tell her what he wanted, and who now followed it up by nipping her hind legs.

Frightened and helpless, she obeyed the stallion. In vain Colonel Harris tugged on the reins. In another second Banner had forced her into a gallop, driving her straight into his band of mares. Rob and Charley followed slowly, broad grins on their faces.

"You wouldn't think that a man who had spent his life on horseback would be apt to get a brand new ridin' experience, but it looks to me like that's what's goin' to happen to Mort," said Sargent joyously. "I'm just as glad I'm not on that mare"

Your 1945 Garden Tomato Growing Important Project In Victory Garden

BY ALL odds the tomato is the universal favorite of home Victory gardeners because they will grow "most anywhere, are productive, a pleasure to grow and to eat. And they are rich in vitamin content."

In full sun, on any reasonably good soil with a medium to good supply of moisture, tomatoes can be grown at some season in every state of the Union.

Tomatoes do not like shade and they do not like too much nitrogenous fertilizer. With these conditions, the plants often grow very rank, but the blossoms drop off instead of forming fruit.

If good tomato plants are available for transplanting from dealers, the small gardener should purchase them rather than grow the few needed in the average small garden. They are not difficult to produce, however.

Good plants about eight inches tall that are well grown are desirable for transplanting. Transplanting should not take place before the frost-free date in your community.

If barnyard manure is applied to the garden where tomatoes are to be grown, it should be supplemented with four to five pounds of superphosphate for each 100 pounds of manure. Twice that amount should be added to sheep or poultry manure. It is generally unwise to work manure into the holes into which tomato plants are to be set, but a handful of commercial fertilizer should be well mixed with the equivalent of a bucketful of soil where each plant is to be set.

In most gardens it is desirable to prune the plants to a single stem or to two stems and tie them to stakes. The stake should be about eight feet long, driven into the soil about two feet and at least 1½ inches in diameter. As the plant develops, side shoots or branches appear at the points where the large leaves are joined to the main stem. These shoots are easily broken out, thus restricting the plant to a single stem. When growth is rapid it is necessary to go over the plants every two or three days to remove the new side-shoots as they arise. Care must be taken that the growing tip of the main stem is not inadvertently pinched out.

A paper collar around young tomato plant protects it from cutworms.

In staking up the plants, strips of rag are best, but soft twine may be used. The string must be tied firmly about the stake first, so that it will not slip, and then passed loosely around the stem, not far below a large leaf, and then tied again. Do not draw the stem too tightly against the stake.

In setting out tomato plants it will be helpful if a heavy paper or light cardboard collar be placed around the stem to protect it from cutworms. The bottom of the collar should extend about an inch below the surface of the soil. A paper clip is handy to hold the collar together. An old post card will do nicely.

Ways to Grow Tomato Plants

Growing of tomatoes calls for as uniform moisture content in the ground as possible. A long dry spell or wide variations in soil moisture content bring about damage by blossom-end rot. You will note a black or brown spot on the blossom end of the fruit, and staked and pruned plants seem to be more generally affected by this rot. On the other hand, plants growing naturally on the ground usually show more rots of other kinds, caused by the fruits lying on or too near the soil.

A light mulch of dried lawn clippings, leaves or similar materials beneath plants grown without supports will help keep the fruit off the soil and help avoid some of the loss due to fruit rot.

Tomato plants for the garden may be started indoors in quart berry boxes, paper drinking cups, paper bands or in regular clay flowerpots.

The containers are filled with sifted soil and placed in the hotbed, or if in the house they are placed in a shallow box. A small amount of seed is sown in each container, and after the plants are well under way they are transferred to the garden, the container usually removed from about the roots of the plants when set in the planting plot or hole. Care should be taken so as not to disturb the roots of the young plants.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The contented cow will be more so after the war, when B. F. Goodrich research men expect low-cost rubber will make possible rubber mattresses or floor covering for stables.

War-born synthetic represented 80 per cent of the nation's rubber consumption in 1944, reports John L. Collier, President of The B. F. Goodrich Company. In 1941 man-made rubber was less than one per cent of our consumption.

The destruction of some 5,000 tires a day on the American battlefronts is one understandable reason for subordination of civilian tire needs to those of the military.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to all our neighbors, relatives and friends for their many kind expressions of sympathy in our recent bereavement. We also thank Rev. J. Frank Anderson for his comforting words, Mr. Arthur Lambrecht for his songs and all those who sent flowers and donated the use of their automobiles.

A precious one from us has gone, A voice we loved is stilled; A place is vacant in our home, That never can be filled. God in His wisdom has recalled, The boon his love hath given, And though his body slumbers here, His soul is safe in heaven.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Probation After Death" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, April 29.

The Golden Text was, "The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O Lord, endureth for ever" (Ps. 138: 8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils. . . And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about three-score furlongs. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near and went with them. . . And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight" (Mark 16: 9; Luke 24: 13-15, 30, 31).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "In the walk to Emmaus, Jesus was known to his friends by the words, which made their hearts burn within them, and by the breaking of bread. The divine Spirit, which identified Jesus thus centuries ago, has spoken through the inspired Word and will speak through it in every age and clime. . . Jesus' unchanged physical condition after what seemed to be death was followed by his exaltation above all material conditions; and this exaltation explained his ascension, and revealed unmistakably a probationary and progressive state beyond the grave" (p. 46).

CORN BORER AND CHINCH BUGS IN PROSPECT

Mr. R. E. Apple, Assistant State Entomologist thinks there may be an increase in corn borer and possibly chinch bugs. "The practical means of control of these two pests is first, for corn borer do not plant corn until after May 15. From May 15 to June 1, we believe the infestation will not be too great. For chinch bugs we usually find bugs coming from oats into corn fields where they do their damage. Heavy rains about the time the bugs are just hatching out, for a prolonged period with high humidity usually kills chinch bugs. From all appearances 1945 may be dry which will be favorable to bugs and unfavorable to corn borer. There fore we would suggest that chinch bugs will usually bother corn ad-journing on oats, wheat or barley fields. We doubt that the bugs will be as bad as they were in 1934 and possibly if we avoid as far as possible keeping oats and corn fields together this will be sufficient.

"It is our opinion that it is cheaper to let bugs have two or three acres of corn than it is to put in a lot of time building barriers unless the bugs are very, very bad. A strip of area perhaps two or three acres wide between oats and corn will help a little, but not a great deal in preventing bugs from oats into corn", according to State Farm Advisor C. A. Hughes.

A WORKABLE HAY DRIER

Build it now... feed richer, greener hay next winter!

Chopped Hay, as well as loose hay, can be barn-cured by the hay drier. This good-looking hay represents part of three cuttings of alfalfa that were blown in the Wright brothers' mow, near Manteno.

Hay Drier Duct Construction on the J. P. Bonfield farm near Geneva shows main air tunnel and lateral ducts over which hay is distributed. Tunnel and ducts are fed by a 36" propeller-type fan.

35 Tons of Loose Alfalfa were cured in the mow last year on the G. Y. Taylor farm, Huntley. As the partially-cured hay lay in the mow, drying air was forced through it by a 42" fan.

Protein and Carotene are saved by barn curing since leaves are not exposed to rain or lost through shattering. J. M. Clifton of Kankakee mow-cured this soybean crop.

Results from experiments on Northern Illinois farms prove that this new plan for barn curing of hay produces green, leafy hay of high protein content...cuts haying losses due to bad weather

Through research and experimentation, it has become a fact that mow or barn curing of hay with forced ventilation has developed into one of the greatest improvements in agricultural processes.

Local Farm Advisors and electric company Farm Representatives have made a thorough study of the process and have worked side by side with farmers who have pioneered in the barn curing of hay, and now the system is within the reach of every farmer who desires to put more Grade 1 hay in his barn, who wishes to do something about the haying losses that occur even under the best of haying conditions.

What it is... what it does

The hay drier consists of wooden ducts built on the mow floor through which an even distribution of air is fan-forced into and upward through the partially field-cured hay. By being able to safely put hay in the mow in a semi-green condition, protein-rich leaves remain on the stems and are not lost through handling processes. Moreover, damage from dew, rain, and excessive sun bleaching is cut to a minimum or completely eliminated. Both loose and chopped hay can be cured by the hay drier.

A hay drier for your farm?

Enthusiasm for hay driers is reflected by the number of farmers requesting installation plans and information. Since plans must be drawn according to individual barns (no two installations are identical), anyone interested in the use of a hay drier should contact his electric company's Farm Representative.

Now is the time to get the complete picture of hay drying, to work on the design for your barn, to place the order for the materials. Do it now and be ready to process next summer's first cutting by this proven drying system. Your local electric company's Farm Representative will be glad to give you full facts and figures. No obligation whatsoever.

Electricity is available to more than 86% of all the farms in the area served by the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois

IAA INTRODUCES BILLS IN BOTH HOUSES ON ROADS

A postwar secondary road program bill has been introduced in both Houses of the Illinois General Assembly by the Illinois Agricultural Association, according to the Association's legislative committee.

Number of the bill is 327 in the Senate and 470 in the House. Under the proposed legislation, $10,000,000 per year would be appropriated from the general surplus funds of the state for farm to highway roads.

The bill provides that the county superintendent of highways, in co-operation with the township commissioners, shall select the roads to be improved.

These roads are to be township or district roads and preference is to be given to school bus and mail routes.

The bill provides that the county superintendent of highways and the township highway commissioners prepare the plans for the improvement of these roads and file them with the state. It is further provided that the townships shall do the grading and build ordinary culverts and that the state funds shall be used for surfacing. Present right of way is to be used and only the minimum amount of grading is to be required.

The state and counties are authorized to acquire surplus road building machinery and equipment from the United States as it becomes available ducive to mental and physical relaxation.

Before entering the service Col. Schindel worked for the Illinois Central Railroad in Chicago. He entered the armed forces Aug. 18, 1941. He is a graduate from the Illinois University.

Mrs. Lizzie Cappel received word Sunday of the sudden death of her niece, Mame Dietz in her home in Joliet Sunday.

Walter Cappel started work Tuesday on the Signal Dept. of the Rock Island working with Mr. Geo. Merriek of Mokena, Signal Maintainer.

for use on these roads.

The bill appropriates $20,000,000 for the biennium beginning July 1, 1945 not more than $10,000,000 to be used in any year.

If federal funds are used for the construction of these roads, then the state appropriation will be reduced by the amount of the federal funds so used.

WFA TO PAY WILL COUNTY BUTTERFAT PRODUCERS 17 CENT SUBSIDY FOR APRIL

Announcement made by the War Food Administration that a feed subsidy of 17 cents a pound will be paid to farmers for the butterfat they produce in April is good news to cream producers of Will County. A subsidy of 10 cents a pound was paid for butterfat produced in the first 3 months of this year.

The payment of the April subsidy is in accordance with the provisions of an amendment to Senate Bill No. 298, extending the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation for 2 years.

This bill, which is intended to stimulate butterfat production, was the last one signed by President Roosevelt and was subscribed by him a few moments before he died.

Under the provisions of the amendment, the subsidy paid to producers of butterfat will now be based on the weighted average national subsidy on whole milk for each month. That is, the per pound subsidy on butterfat paid to cream producers will be 1-4th of the production payments on 100 pounds of whole milk produced in the various regions throughout the nation.

Grow an abundance of high-quality roughage

That's Point 1 of the National 8-Point Dairy Program. The U. S. Department of Agriculture says that your cows will eat more of better roughage (legumes, early-cut hay, green-cured crops, good silage). This will keep milk production up with less grain and concentrates—and save you money. See your County Agricultural Agent for good local advice.

NEW CEMETERY LAW TO COME BEFORE LEGISLATURE

Attorney General Geo. F. Barrett announced today completion of a new cemetery code for Illinois designed to smash cemetery racketeering and fully protect the lot owners and public. It will be the first complete act of its kind ever to be offered in the legislature of any state in the Union. One primary purpose of the act, he said, is to protect perpetual care funds of cemetery associations.

The code was drawn, Barrett explained, after thousands of complaints had been received by his office alleging cemetery associations had received payment for but had not rendered perpetual care to graves and lots as agreed, had used perpetual care funds for other purposes, had passed arbitrary rules and regulations and had levied unwarranted assessments upon lot owners.

ANOTHER big league baseball season is well on its way. We were thinking about this as we sat on the Yankee bench with Art Fletcher, Joe McCarthy's field marshal.

Art began his baseball career 38 years ago and he is still a spark-plug, nearing 60, lean, hard and full of fire. We soon started talking about the Yankees and the new American league pennant race.

"This should be a great race," he told me. "I know many are picking the Browns to win again, and maybe they will, as they haven't suffered much from the draft so far. But if we can keep the lineup we have today, I still believe the Yankees have a great chance."

"No complaining, you understand, but the Yankees have taken the worst beating from the draft in baseball—Dickey, Gordon, DiMaggio, Henrich, Ruffing, Rizzuto, Keller, Hemsley, Johnson, and I could give you ten more. Now we start a new season with a pretty good club. A ball club good enough to win—or finish close-up. But suppose we lose Johnny Lindell, Snuffy Stirrweiss, Etten and one or two more? Then we are pretty well shot. No one knows what will happen for the Browns are pretty well set, and they are the team to beat—with what they have on hand right now."

Over in the National

After leaving Art Fletcher, we called on two other pilots, Mel Ott and Leo Durocher.

Mel, who makes several records every time he walks to the plate, refused to concede anything to the Cardinals and Pirates, picked to run 1-2.

"Maybe they will," Mel said. "But only maybe. The Cardinals look best on copy paper and the Pirates look next best. But ball games are won on the field—not on copy paper. All I can say is that our 1945 Giant team will give them all a battle. We have an improved team all along the line. We'll have better pitching and a better punch. You know what that means. You don't have to tell me what the Cardinals and Pirates have. But I am conceding them nothing. We'll give them a scrap all the way, moving on with what we have. What we'll have later, no one knows."

I happen to know that Frank Frisch, disabled all through the spring campaign, has full faith in his Pirates.

"We were good enough to beat the Cardinals nine straight games down the stretch," Frank said, "and they won't be any better this season. If as strong."

But the fact remains that the Cardinals are still the team they must all worry about—and they all know it—whatever they may say. As Leo Durocher put it, "Any team that can beat out the Cardinals can win this pennant. The Dodgers? No. We are the guess team of the league, and I'm not going to try any early season guessing."

In talking over the 1945 rating with a number of ball players, managers and old timers who have been around—I picked up this order of finish for the two pennants:

National League—Cardinals, Pirates, Giants, Reds, Cubs, Braves, Dodgers, Phillies.

American League—Browns, Yankees, Tigers, Red Sox, Athletics, Indians, White Sox, Senators.

In any event the main problem seems to be St. Louis and its two 1944 winners. They are the teams to stop.

Army Sports Program

The army is going to do all it can to provide entertainment and physical fitness for the fighting men in Europe, who simply can't be rushed home. Here is the general idea in behalf of the millions left in Europe, temporarily at least, as given to me from the war office in Washington—

"The Commanding Generals of the European and Mediterranean Theaters have estimated that over 60 per cent of the soldiers within their commands will elect to participate in the new athletic program. In General Eisenhower's command alone, plans call for 150,000 participants in track and field events, 200,000 in organized baseball, approximately 800,000 in informal football games, 800,000 in volleyball, and 400,000 in informal football and touch-football."

"The entire program will assist in 'de-combatizing' personnel scheduled for demobilization by replacing the combat skills it was necessary to teach during the period of mobilization, with competitive and recreational sports."

"Purchasing equipment and supplies for the program presented serious problems. Funds, priorities, sources of supply, production schedules, rail transportation and water shipping space were but a few. Upon approval of the plan, the Special Services Division set the wheels in motion."

Corn Roots Breathe And Require Oxygen

Proper Drainage And Air Essential

IF CORN roots are to perform their all-important job of supplying mineral nutrients to the above-ground, sun-lighted parts of the plants, they must be grown in well-drained, ventilated soils that provide them with plenty of oxygen to breathe, according to Dr. George N. Hoffer of the American Potash institute.

"Corn plants cannot endure wet soils for any length of time; nor can they get along without plenty of oxygen for their hard working root systems," Dr. Hoffer declared. "Few farmers realize the amount of work these roots carry on. They must anchor the plant firmly, and absorb nutrients from the soil to support the demands of the other parts of the plants. They are the living parts of the corn plant we frequently overlook when we try to diagnose foliage deficiency symptoms, or become dissatisfied with the size and quality of the ears produced."

Pointing out that many fields of midwestern corn were fertilized by the so-called "plow-under" method last season, Dr. Hoffer declared that excellent results were obtained in practically all cases where the soils were well-drained and in good tilth and where the stands of corn and the rainfall were ample.

During the latter part of the 1944 growing season, however, numerous cases of "negative" response to the plow-furrow fertilizers were reported. The heavily fertilized plants were no better than those fertilized in the regular manner with row applications.

Briefly, the diagnosis of these troubles seemed to be as follows," Dr. Hoffer stated, "when large quantities of organic matter and nitrogen-carrying fertilizers are plowed into the soil, enormous amounts of nutrient and energy materials are available for the corn plant roots and the soil organisms—mostly bacteria and fungi—to feed upon. These stimulated activities created a large demand for oxygen for both the growing corn roots and those other soil inhabitants. In well-drained soils in good tilth and aeration capacity, the oxygen of the air and that carried into the soil in rain is adequate for all the living entities involved."

"But when the supply of oxygen in the soil, air and water becomes insufficient for the living corn roots and other organisms, an oxygen tension is created under which the corn roots cannot compete with the soil bacteria and fungi."

Easy Dump Feed Box

Hinged Feed Box.

It is almost impossible to clean out the ordinary feed box. This difficulty may be eliminated if the feed box is hinged, as shown in this drawing.

By making the top of the box level with the top of the manger, and arranging hook to hold box stationary so that stock cannot dump the box by "nosing," a sanitary, foolproof box can be provided.

New Coccidiosis Cure

An actual cure for coccidiosis is known at last. The cure is the drug of the sulfa type, namely sulfadiazine. At present it is scarce and expensive, much of the supply being required by the armed forces.

Indications are that feeding the drug for five successive days will clean up an infected flock, although, of course, it cannot prevent ill effects or even deaths among birds that reached an advanced stage of the disease before treatment.

The Bronze Bell

By SARAH FERGUSON
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Features.

THE day was sunless. Everywhere, in all the cities and hamlets, bells had been removed from all the churches in Belgium. In the city square of Antwerp, the people were gathered, saddened, tense. The children, close-lipped, faces drawn and serious, spoke in whispers if at all. They were strewing flowers and leaves over the bronze bells which the Germans had demanded from the populace.

No one paid any attention to ten-year-old Anton Beyden. Anton was very bright.

Long ago, the Germans had looted homes—stores and shops were robbed—brass, iron and bronze were confiscated and now they had called for a thousand more tons of bronze.

"But we have no more to give," the officer was informed.

"You have the church bells," he snapped. "Give us those."

Within the hour the enemy would come. The bells were already stacked in the square. Never again would they call the people to prayer at eventide.

Little Anton turned away, pulling his wagon behind him, his wooden shoes clumping on the cobbles. His wind-blown hair lay in thick blond curls on his forehead, his blue denim blouse open at the neck, his pants long, shabby but clean. He was the son of Pierre Beyden who had been killed by a German officer's car shortly after the occupation. Ever since, Anton's mother had taken in washing to earn a living. Before her marriage she had lived at the rectory, a true and trusted servant. Among her many customers was Mme. Philippe, wife of the rector.

"Anton," she whispered.

Mme. Philippe helped Anton lift the large basket into his wagon. She raised the lid for him to peer inside, then carefully closed it again, holding him by the arm. "Anton," she whispered, determined to impress him with the importance of what she was about to say. "Here is a precious treasure. Tell your mother to hide it until the war is over."

The boy started off, subconsciously aware of Mme. Philippe's warning. At the end of the road he stopped. Always about this time the Angelus bell rang. He paused to pray—prayer and the bell went together. He clasped his hands and bowed his head. And then he thought of Hans Mueller, the thirteen-year-old German bully.

A cold fear possessed him. His legs grew weak and his mouth went dry as he waited for the bell to ring. He had stood longer than usual when he spied the young Nazi running at top speed.

With intense fury Anton remembered. Something within him cautioned him to guard "this precious treasure" with his life. Instinctively he knew the boy would run off with it. With a shriek of rage he threw himself on his tormentor and knocked Hans down, trampling him with his wooden clogs.

A strange new light shone in Anton's eyes. They were dark-blue pools now. He felt like a great soldier who had suddenly overcome a whole army by himself.

In the square the precious bells were already being loaded on trucks and vehicles of every size and kind. Anton trudged on, his head high, pretending not to see what was taking place in his beloved city. But the next day he had almost forgotten again as he went to his customary place to pray. A queer contraction of the throat attacked him as he waited—waited for the bell to ring. The Germans had removed the Angelus—and God. God and the Angelus were one in Anton's feeble mind.

A pall lay over the city. People went about their business half-heartedly, with pale anxious faces. Their hope was gone. Then suddenly, unexpectedly, the Allies arrived. . . . But there was no sounding of the glad tidings in Belgium, as there had been in France. Then miraculously, out of nowhere, a bell was heard to ring—in soft uneven strokes.

Little Anton smiled to himself. Then he began to laugh hysterically—he laughed and laughed. . . . His wan face grew softly serious, and a beautiful smile parted his lips. His beloved Angelus would ring again. . . . The hated Nazis hadn't been able to destroy his Angelus. He and the rector's wife had outwitted them. He thought of the "bronze treasure" he had taken back to the rectory in a hamper, one mornning.

Notes of a Newspaperman:

Letter to Woodrow Wilson from Franklin D. Roosevelt: "My dear Mr. President: I entirely forgot on Sunday evening to speak to you of a personal matter which might come up during my absence—the question of my nomination for the Governorship of New York. I have tried in every way to stop it, but some of your friends and mine have talked of the possibility of forcing this while I am away, and of asking you to encourage me to accept it."

"I sincerely hope the matter will not come up. I have made my position entirely clear that my duty lies in my present work—not only my duty to you and the country, but to myself. If I were at any time to leave the Assistant Secretaryship it could only be for active service."

"Furthermore, may I say that I am very certain that it would be a grave mistake for either you or any member of the Administration to ask that I give up war work for what is frankly very much of a political job in these times. I cannot accept such a nomination at this time with honesty or honor to myself. I think I have put off all danger of it, but in case you are appealed to, I want you to know what I feel—and I know too that you will understand and that you will not listen to the appeal."

Regardless of what you have heard and read, FDR never wanted 3rd Term. . . . A few months before his 2nd Term was about to end, Mrs. Roosevelt invited kin of Ed Flynn to spend a night in the White House. She especially wanted their two tots to sleep there "so that they never will forget the thrill of it."

"Considering the people (we do not really know) who have been here," she said in effect, "I want the children to be with us for a night—and this positively is their very, very last chance!"

After a press conference in his White House office a reporter told the President of a story that had come in the mail. Did he mind its publication? . . . "It was at the Gridiron Dinner," said FDR. "You'd better clear it with some of the boys who were there." . . . A famed Republican Senator, it appears, was teasing FDR about his "lucky Inaugural suit." . . . "If you run for a third term," heckled the Senator, "let me borrow that suit, and I'll run against you and win!" . . . FDR told him he couldn't let him borrow his "lucky" suit. . . . "Because I may need it myself!"

"You mean," was the retort, "that you ARE going to run again?"

"I mean," said Mr. Roosevelt wearily, "that I may need it myself. I do not consider it my Inaugural suit. It is my—funeral suit."

Another of the favorite FDR stories deals with the White House visitor who remarked: "Mr. President, how in the world did you acquire such patience—with all the bores you meet in a day?"

FDR grimly replied: "You acquire patience after you've spent two years learning how to wiggle your big toe again."

Men who were trusted by President Roosevelt were never frisked when they were admitted to FDR's office. The Secret Servicemen knew his friends, of course. . . . One newly appointed agent, however, took no chances. . . . A newspaper man he had never seen before (and who hadn't held his White House pass high enough for the agent to see) was suddenly jerked out of the crowd swiftly marching in for the press confab. The newspaper man (when he got his bearings again) was irked no end. . . . Later, alone with the President, he kidded about it. "I thought everybody down here," he said, "knew who was on your team!" . . . "Well," replied the President, "it is comforting to know that the boys are careful."

"Not so careful," said the visitor, displaying a loaded pistol.

Among one reporter's thrills was hearing him guffaw. When the gag was funny he would howl. The vaudeville comics would call it "a belly laugh." . . . The reporter thinks, too, he is one of the few who ever saw him weep. . . . It happened when ex-Cong. Lambertson and others were criticizing the war records of his sons. . . . Mr. Roosevelt was miserable about a letter that came (that morning) from one of them. It concluded: "Pop, sometimes I really hope one of us gets killed so that maybe they'll stop picking on the rest of the family!" . . . When he read it, FDR's lower lip started to quiver, and the tears came.

This Republic is governed by the will of the people. That expressed will has been interrupted by the will of God, in the passing of President Roosevelt.

Now, President Truman, the due constitutional choice of the American people, is entitled to the fullest loyalty and cooperation as Commander in Chief.

This is not a time for slackening of effort. On the contrary, this new, unexpected and grievous challenge to the American people is a challenge to Democracy itself.

Lions or Timekeeper, Benchley Tamed 'Em!

At one time Robert Benchley wrote for a magazine which employed a timekeeper whose duty it was to dispatch nasty notes requesting explanations from employees who were absent or tardy. Upon receiving one of these unpleasant missives, Benchley hastened to explain.

"It's true I was five minutes late this morning," said Benchley, "but it was unavoidable. In passing the circus, on my way to work, I was brutally attacked by a dozen escaped lions. Summoning every ounce of strength in my body I fought the angry beasts off alone!"

The timekeeper discontinued his practice of sending sharp notes.
